St. Joseph's School of Nursing Commemorative Calendar

1911-2011

1890

On June 11, 1890, St. Joseph's Hospital, with a capacity of 25 beds, was formally opened and operated under the direction of the Sisters of St. Joseph of Hamilton, Ontario. They purchased Bishop Thomas Joseph Dowling's (4th Bishop of Hamilton) residence, called "Undermount" on John Street South for $10,000. The Sisters of St. Joseph provided the manual labour but recognized a pressing need for additional trained nurses.

1911

On September 8, 1911, the growth of the hospital led the Sisters into the decision to open a school for lay nurses. Thus St. Joseph's School of Nursing began. At the age of 29, Sister Gerard Moran'15 was the first Sister to enroll. Most of the nurse's training was of the hands-on-variety - she learned by doing. Four doctors are credited with laying the foundation of the nursing school: Thomas Balfe, Ingersol Olmsted, James Edgar and Herbert Sullivan, Sr.

soon as the probationer was deemed worthy while black bands were affixed to the nursing caps when students had earned them. Each school of nursing had their own signature caps that were worn with immense pride.

At 6 a.m. during a typical school day, a merciless bell, which was rung by hand, could be heard ringing up and down the halls. Uniform inspection and attendance was taken at 6:30 a.m. Everyone went to Mass and had breakfast before going on a 12-hour duty, from 7 a.m. to 7 p.m. They were relieved for 1/2 to 2 hours every day.

Classes began in the evening after their shift when the doctors and nurses were free for lectures.

Service to the hospital was the student's first priority while formal education came second. The purpose of the hospital was to provide charitable services, rather than education.

The Ontario government passed legislation in 1920 to enact a registration law, which required all nursing students to write departmental exams on the completion of their course. This was the signal for extensive improvements in all schools of nursing seeking provincial accreditation.

Oakbank Nurses' Residence was built in the mid-1850's. Edward, the Prince of Wales stayed at Oakbank in 1860 when he attended the opening ceremonies of the city's waterworks system.

By 1921, the hospital had grown to accommodate more patients, which created the need for more nurses. An increase in student enrollment promised to burden the already crowded residences. So on Tuesday November 28, 1922 Undermount was officially opened.

THE RESIDENCES

1916, the nurses' first residence was the old Adam Brown home on the corner of St. Joseph's Drive and Mountwood Avenue, then known as Alma Avenue.

Marygrove, built in 1869, was purchased by the hospital for use as a nurses' residence in 1947.

Fontbonne Hall Nurses' Residence opened in 1962. Today it is used for doctors' and administration offices.

Graduation Class 1938

As in all areas of education, St. Joseph's School of Nursing was affected by the Second World War. Classes were increasing rapidly in size, more residence accommodation had to be obtained and additional graduate staff nurses were employed, thereby removing some of the service responsibilities from the students. Each week, all students had a half-day off. Curfew was set for 10 p.m., at which time all students had to be in their bedrooms. One night a month, there was a late leave of 11:30 p.m. It was compulsory for nurses to sign in at the hospital office and return to residence via an underground tunnel, a dreaded walk at that hour because they passed the morgue en route. In the first year, the student received $6 allowance, with a one-dollar increase each year. Anything broken or damaged was deducted from the student's salary. There was a strong sense of seniority among students – doors had to be opened for senior students. Lipstick, nail polish and rouge were not permitted. After three months probation (probies) student nurses received their caps. In their second year, they received their "cap pin", to be worn on their bib until Black Band Ceremony in their third year, where they proudly displayed the pin on their black band. On Graduation Day, school pins were received along with diplomas and beautiful bouquets of red roses.

longer included in off-duty time. In the mid-40's, more lectures were given by doctors, emphasis increased on curriculum planning and a Sister instructor was appointed to assist the director in teaching.

The instructor for nursing procedure was Sister Mary Assumption, for medication Sister Loretto Gainor '19, and for obstetrical nursing and care of the newborn, Sister Mercedes Gallagher '24 who was the supervisor of Casa Maria.

The Sisters taught 90% of the content in the area of nursing and an increasing numbers of doctors lectured, too. Florence M. Roach was the first lay instructress. Other teachers were Sister M. Monica '27 teaching Professional Ethics, Principles of Nursing, and Sister M. Gerard '15 teaching Operating Room Technique.

When she graduated on May 22, 1941 Leona Johnson Hudecki recalled: "Our brothers and boyfriends were gone. The usual music played for graduation was Pomp and Circumstance. Our class had been anticipating this beautiful march-in. Instead There'll Always be an England was played because by that time we were conscious of the horror of war." As a result of the war, nurses were needed around the country and overseas. St. Joseph's response was to admit three classes rather than the two in 1944.

Irene MacInnes (married name De Coste) recalls being called by Sister Virginia to an important meeting in the linen cupboard because office space was non-existent. Sister Virginia was planning to start an innovative health program for the staff and asked if Irene was interested in the job.

At first it was primarily a student health service but bit by bit it expanded, and by 1968, Irene was zeroing in on all of the employees doing pre-employment, routine physicals and immunization programs.

In 1959 Dr. Robert McHarg was hired as the Medical Director of the service.

Today it is called the Personnel Health Unit.
